Ginni has lived in Bedford since 1975. She and her husband, David, raised two children here (Jennifer, Susanne) and David established a business which still has its headquarters on Alfred Circle. Active in various local organizations, Ginni traces her interest in The Bedford Citizen back to her early years in town when she was active in the Bedford League of Women Voters. “Central to the work of the League is the principle of clear, reliable and objective information as a means to informed decision making. I see that reflected squarely in the mission of The Bedford Citizen.”

Ginni has been on the Board since the founding of The Citizen in 2012 and served as its President from 2015 to 2017. She is a member of the Executive Committee, chairs the Nominating Committee, and oversees the student writers who contribute to Voices @ Bedford High School.

“Bedford is a unique community – we’re small and highly visible to one another. Ensuring cohesiveness and working for the good of the whole town – even if there are differences of opinion about what that is – has characterized every local organization I’ve been involved in. Town Meeting is yet another expression of that. I believe that providing reliable information about the what, when, and how of our decision-making process and keeping people informed about the cultural life of our town enable a strong community core that will keep Bedford a vibrant place in which to live.”

Ginni worked for 25 years as a Human Resources professional specializing in technology start-ups, including Chipcom Corporation (now 3Com), American Super Conductor, and Wildfire Communications. She is a graduate of Penn State University.
