

Mitch Evans

Mitch Evans moved from the UK to Bedford in 2011 with her (yes, she is female) husband and two children. Her daughters are now in high school and middle school are involved in soccer, lacrosse, theatre and orchestra. Mitch is a active part of the Bedford community and a member of First Parish Church in Bedford where she volunteers for the Caring Network and is a religious education teacher, curriculum coordinator, and writer.

She is on the board of The Bedford Citizen and writes mostly educational themed articles. Mitch was a Governor of an elementary school in the UK and a Trustee of a local kindergarten.

“I am a firm believer in the importance of The Bedford Citizen’s role in informing and supporting the local community. In today’s world of social media and digital accessibility, we are all being bombarded by multiple interpretations of the facts, quite often mixed in with personal views. Therefore, the role of TBC as an unbiased and controlled source of accurate information is even more vital. Our town is growing, and I am excited to be part of a team that is able to keep Bedford residents up to date on these changes.”

Mitch was awarded honors degrees from both Queen Mary and Kings Colleges in London. Having spent over 15 years working in the Advertising and Marketing industry, Mitch decided to change career paths in 2015 and headed back to school herself, where she studied for a Master’s in Early Years Education at Lesley University. She is currently teaching at Lt. Eleazar Davis School in Bedford.
